

Look at the size of that Keystone Marker: Linked in to York County history, 2/24/13

Posted on February 24, 2013 by Jim McClure

Share 6 | Print | Tweet 3 | Email

Loganville in headlines/York Charter High?/New Oxford collectors

Keystone Markers, those often-forgotten signs along state highway planted between the world wars, are undergoing renovation through Pennsylvania. This marker stood unnoticed, really, on East Prospect Street near the York city line. 'It's one of those things, I guess you just don't pay a lot of attention to it,' city Public Works Director Jim Gross in a ydr.com story, 'York city workers polishing up their history.' Notice the size of the marker, something that isn't immediately noticeable when it's elevated on a pole. That will happen soon. Keystone Marker Trust is calling attention to these markers across the state. Also of interest: 5 quick facts about East Market Street's Welcome to York signs.

Quarry quarry centers on recent fee hike

York officials say it's again time to move

York sign updated, back at road's edge

Posted on February 25, 2013 by Tim Stonesifer

Share 0 | Print | Tweet 0 | Email

York's public works department, signing on.

That was the word this week from city supervisor Dave Rudolph, who said that old cast-iron "Keystone Marker" — recently taken down by a city crew — has been replaced along East Prospect Street.

Recently, this is what York's "Keystone Marker" along East Prospect Street looked like. Photo courtesy of David Rudolph.

And what a difference a few days makes.

You'll recall from that previous story that city crews went looking for this old marker, after the mayor's office got a call that it was languishing at the side of the road, and could use some sprucing up.

Well, after some care from a city crew, that large marker is again looking as good as new, and nearly 100 years after it was first planted it's back along the side of the road in York.

Rudolph offered a few more pics of the process.

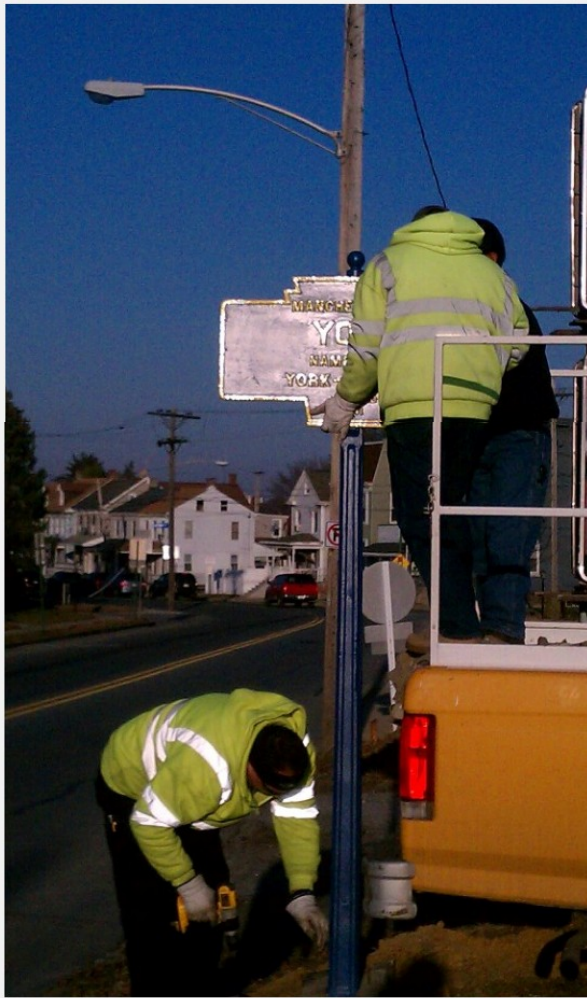

ylimits/2013/02/25/york-sign-updated-back-at-roads-edge/sign2/

City crews have spent time recently fixing the old Keystone Marker that sits along East Prospect Street. Photo courtesy of David Rudolph.

This shot shows the finished product, after city crews were done with the old sign. Photo courtesy of David Rudolph.

And, the sign is back, thanks to city crews. Photo courtesy of David Rudolph.